executive summary

IPL is more than just cricket – for brands, it provides an unmatched opportunity to tap into the minds of millions of cricket fanatics in the country. More importantly, while viewers are watching TV, a whopping 70% of them constantly use their smartphones<sup>1</sup>. On one hand, there are the LIVE matches and on the other, a whole set of platforms that users are active on & content formats they engage with, parallelly. From voicing their opinions on social media to participating in polls & quizzes, the list goes on. Throughout the IPL, viewers stay active on their phones leading to interactive cricket viewing – starkly different from traditional experiences which didn't allow such engagement.

This creates a huge window for advertisers looking to catch the fleeting attention of their audiences, generate curiosity and drive conversions. While they are hooked to their smartphones, potential customers can be targeted through relevant, clutter-free messaging on mobile. This way, brands do more than reach out to their audience at the right time – they get to maximize the return on ad dollars by leveraging the buzz & excitement around IPL.

What better platform to communicate a brand's message than the mobile lock screen itself? Available right at the fingertips of its users, Glance – the world's only lock screen platform – can be an effective medium for garnering eyeballs during the biggest sporting event in the country. With most consumers tuned into their phones while watching the IPL, they could be served ads that make them act, right on the front page of mobile. Through content-led marketing on screen zero, in a range of innovative formats and diverse languages, brands can reach out to existing and potential customers amongst Glance's active user base of 163Mn.

This report summarizes the key content consumption patterns of Indian cricket & IPL lovers with a focus on prevalent second screen behaviour and how brands can leverage these insights to create winning campaigns on Glance.

research objective

The success of the IPL lies in giving cricket a larger-than-life appeal with 360-degree entertainment. This mammoth spectacle thrives on the engagement of its fan communities, who have come far from being passive viewers. IPL enthusiasts go beyond watching the matches; with every season their participation in social conversations has increased. Standard commentary has taken a backseat as users now look forward to watch parties with their favourite celebs or search the internet for expert opinions on the tournaments. Most of these activities happen through mobile, in parallel with consumption of the IPL matches.

This prevalent second screen behaviour can thus be leveraged by any brand looking to bridge the gap with its usually distracted audience. Keeping in mind these consumption patterns - which includes everything from browsing social media to participating in online contests - brands can create winning content-led advertising solutions.

research objective

Through this report, we aimed to analyse consumer sentiment around the IPL, with a focus on second screen usage during matches, along with suggestions on mobile innovations that could cut through the digital clutter.

The main objectives of this study were to:

1. Understand second-screen behaviour of Indians during IPL
2. Share strategies for converting cricket lovers to brand advocates
3. Suggest content offerings for winning over cricket lovers
